On Recent Ecclesial Events

I'm angry, and... you should be too... Our Lord got angry at times, and if it's good enough for him, it's good enough for us. And what most angered him? It was when religious leaders did things to scandalize the faithful and pull them away from God. When they proclaimed to be leading people to God but then said and did things which were contrary to his Father's Will. This angered him greatly.

Cardinal Pell on Pope Benedict's Legacy

Cardinal Pell also saw Pope Benedict's protection and encouragement of the 1962 Missal as an essential part of the pontiff's legacy. He said: "We will see a reform of the reform in the liturgy. The transcendental dimension of the new Mass needs to be strengthened." Cardinal Pell told OSV News he was himself "completely devoted" to the Tridentine

Mass, which he said he “celebrated each day.” Finally, in what seems to be his pastoral testament today, Cardinal Pell told OSV News: “We’ve always got to be looking for ways in which we can better present the transcendent to the people who are praying in our churches and get them to open their minds and hearts to the greatness and goodness of God.”

On Synods

If I must speak the truth, I feel disposed to shun every conference of bishops, because I never saw a synod brought to a happy issue, not remedying but rather increasing existing evils. (St Gregory Nazianzen quoted by St John Henry Newman)

On Recent Anglican Converts

If you look on social media, you’ll see a lot of comments wondering why these men converted. Their implication is clear: it’s not worth converting to Catholicism due to the current state of the Church... Unfortunately, the scandals and confusion... have led many Catholics to see only the human elements of the Church and ignore the divine. With a cacophony of problems surrounding us, it’s difficult to hear the beautiful symphony the Holy Spirit is still conducting in the Church. Like Our Lord, the Church is both human and divine... Our Lord’s human nature was perfect and sinless... The Church, however, is made up of countless human members who are sinful and corrupted... the Church’s human side often mars and covers up her divine aspects. Two factors... work to conceal the divine elements in today’s Church. First, the Church is clearly going through one of the worst crises in her history... The human failings of Catholics are on prominent display during such a time of severe crisis. A second factor... is social media [which] by its nature amplifies bad news and diminishes good news... Scandal is more popular than good news. There’s a reason we call scrolling through social media “doomscrolling,” after all. So when you combine a terrible crisis with ubiquitous tools to magnify the noise of that crisis, you have a recipe for seeing only the human failings of the Church and missing its divine elements.
