From the Press

The appointment of Archbishop Víctor Manuel Fernández as prefect of the Dicastery for the Doctrine of the Faith has a symbolic weight of great import. In a certain sense, it represents the culmination of the pontificate of Pope Francis, who has meant to send a clear sign to those he referred to... as the “backward-looking” of the Church... In the last sixty years, the points of departure from the Tradition of the Church have been many, but the first and most eloquent reversal of perspective dates back to the 11 October 1962 address Gaudet Mater Ecclesia with which John XXIII opened the Second Vatican Council. Pope Francis’ letter to the new prefect of the Congregation for Doctrine of the Faith, in its language and content, has much which resonates with that document... John XXIII explained that Vatican II had not been convened to condemn errors or formulate new dogmas, but to present the Church’s traditional teaching in language suited to the new times. John XXIII affirmed that: "[A]s for the present time, the Bride of Christ prefers to use the medicine of mercy instead of taking up the weapons of rigor; she thinks that she must meet the needs of the day, presenting the value of her teaching more clearly rather than condemning."

[I]t became clear that John XXIII's allocution was the manifesto of a new ecclesiology... a new Church, opposed to the Constantinian one of Pius XII, a Church no longer militant, no longer defining and assertive, but itinerant and in dialogue: a synodal church.

In this new perspective, the Holy Office, which for centuries had been the Church's bulwark against the errors which attacked it, no longer had a reason to exist, or in any case, had to change its mission.

On 8 November 1963, the cardinal archbishop of Cologne, Josef Frings... launched a violent attack against the Holy Office... Frings denounced the "immoral methods" of the Holy Office, stating that its procedure "no longer suits our age, harms the Church and is an object of scandal for many"... Josef Frings was archbishop of Cologne, president of the German Bishops' Conference and one of the most authoritative representatives of the alliance of Central European bishops which opposed the conservative side... Paul VI did not publicly defend the Holy Office [of which he was the Prefect] and gave de facto credence to Frings' position.

Three years later, in 1968, Cardinal Frings led the contestation against the encyclical Humanae Vitae of Paul VI. Fr Joseph Ratzinger, who had been the inspirer and ghostwriter of Cardinal Frings at the Council, as Archbishop Victor Fernández has been of Pope Francis, at that time began to distance himself from the more progressive wing of the Church.

After Paul VI closed the Second Vatican Council on 8 December 1965, the "reform" of the Curia was the first initiative to implement the conciliar revolution launched by John XXIII. The curial edifice, built up by previous popes over the centuries, was systematically demolished by Paul VI. What was needed, for starters, was a symbolic event: the transformation of the Congregation of the Holy Office... into the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

Fr Yves-Marie Congar... on two occasions (in 1946 and in 1954), urinated on the door of the Holy Office, as a sign of contempt for the supreme institution of the Church. On 26 November 1994, he was made a cardinal by John Paul II.

During a Lunchtime Conversation in the Rectory

If you were elected Pope, what would be your first act?
My first act would be to restore the Holy Office or Roman Inquisition to its proper primacy of place with the Pope as its head.

During a Lunchtime Conversation at Seminary

If the Pope just stayed in the Vatican and anathematized people, the Church would be a lot better off!
