From the Press

On Anglican Non-Orders and Nonsense (Gaetano Masciullo, Lifesite)

The formal confirmation of Sarah Mullally as the new Anglican [Archbishette(1)] of Canterbury was interrupted when a pastor publicly objected and was forcibly removed from the service... Paul Williamson stood up and shouted his objection after the officiant declared that no opposition had been presented... "I did!" Williamson shouted during the ceremony, after the Proctor for the College of Canons of Canterbury Cathedral stated that "no person has appeared in opposition to the confirmation."

1. This could be a legitimate title. As a biological woman who presumably identifies as such, Mullaley could not assume the title Archladyman of Canterbury. Although in this crazy world...

Williamson is a representative of that segment of the Anglican clergy which has consistently rejected the validity of female “priests” and “bishops.” The schismatic Church of England (1) has accepted female deacons since 1985, female priests since 1992, and female bishops since 2014. However, Anglican orders are always invalid. In the apostolic letter Apostolicae Curiae (1896), Pope Leo XIII declared “with certain knowledge, that the ordinations celebrated according to the Anglican rite have been and are entirely invalid and absolutely null.” (2) This judgment is grounded in defects of form and intention introduced into the Edwardine Ordinal and consistently reaffirmed by the Catholic magisterium.

1. Not having a valid episcopate, the Anglican sect is not a church but an ecclesial organization. To speak of female bishops/priests is an oxymoron, like speaking about square circles.
2. The judgement of Leo XIII is infallible. It is one of those instances where papal infallibility extends to “dogmatic facts” - an infallible determination about a point of history, necessary for maintaining the integrity of the Faith and the Church.

On Deniers (Gaetano Masciullo, Lifesite)

Catholic theologian Andrés Torres Queiruga, known for questioning the historical and miraculous nature of Jesus’ resurrection, [delivered] a lecture at the major seminary in Santiago de Compostela, Spain, this month... The speaker is known for being one of the academics most critical of the dogmas professed by the Church. In his book “The Resurrection without Miracle”, Torres Queiruga writes: “The resurrection is not only not a miracle, but it is not even an empirical event. Faith in the resurrection does not depend on whether one accepts or rejects the historical reality of the empty tomb.” ... The responsibility for hosting the event ultimately rests with Archbishop Francisco José Prieto Fernández, who governs the Archdiocese of Santiago de Compostela... Torres Queiruga has proposed a theological understanding of redemption which dissents from classical Catholic formulations. In various writings, he has argued that the death of Jesus on the cross should not be interpreted primarily as an expiatory or sacrificial act that objectively reconciles humanity with God, but rather as a historical consequence of Jesus’ conflict with the religious and social context of his time. Drawing on philosophical and theological sources such as Immanuel Kant, Rudolf Bultmann, and Georg Hegel, Torres Queiruga maintains that faith involves an imaginative or symbolic mediation that does not necessarily correspond to empirically verifiable historical events. In this framework, he has argued that the resurrection of Christ should be understood as an experience of faith by the disciples rather than as a physical event involving the dead body of Jesus of Nazareth... Torres Queiruga writes that the hypothetical discovery of the corpse of Jesus would not be incompatible with Christian faith, but could prompt a re-examination of inherited theological interpretations.

1. Although a more egregious case, this is an example of detaching Christianity (and Judaism) from history, which invariably goes on to deny God’s Revelation and intervention (up to and including the Incarnation, the ultimate intervention) and reduces the gospel to “be nice.” Even otherwise pious Catholics will call into question the special creation of Adam and Eve, the Fall, the Flood, the Exodus...
